Like other CAD programs, AutoCAD can help engineers, architects, and other skilled designers to create and modify drawings, models, and other drawings and documents. The user interface (UI) for Autodesk CAD programs provides access to functions and drawing objects, information related to those functions and objects, and a workspace. A workstation consists of a personal computer or laptop running the AutoCAD software, a tablet, or other display device, and the appropriate hardware to connect to a network or to the Internet. A user can work entirely on a computer workstation (desktop) or move between multiple workstations. Contents It is possible to define and draw complex shapes for the purpose of, say, rendering on the web with asp.net. There are many methods and resources available for this. But are there any best practices when it comes to JSON-RPC? For a number of years, the JSON-RPC format has been used for messaging in distributed systems. Its benefits include its simple and expressive syntax, being unopinionated about the data formats in use in a system, and the fact that the format is not dependent on a particular programming language. JSON-RPC is a data format and protocol that has been developed to provide a mechanism for long-polling and RPC style operations between disconnected entities in a distributed system. In practice, JSON-RPC implementations are commonly found in web services. Structure of JSON-RPC 1.0 JSON-RPC is a simple text format that can be used to carry structured messages between client and server. It is simply a set of key/value pairs wrapped in curly braces. { "jsonrpc" : "2.0", "method" : " getChannels", "params" : [ "CAD" ], "id" : 1 } Where the above example shows the key/value pairs in bold with a space separating the pairs, the following shows the same code as text format: { "jsonrpc": "2.0", "method": "getChannels", "params": ["CAD"], "id": 1 } In the above example, the key/value pair is just the name of the operation, in this case "getChannels". That key will also be used later as a reference in the parameters of the request. The parameter for the request is the key "CAD",
