To determine the relationship between FN1 and lysyl oxidase (LOX), and the effect of FN1 on the mRNA expression of LOX in chondrocytes. The expression of FN1 in the articular cartilage of OA patients was examined by immunohistochemistry and Western blot analysis. The expression of FN1 and LOX in chondrocytes cultured in vitro was also examined. The effect of FN1 on the expression of LOX in chondrocytes was tested by Western blot analysis and a luciferase reporter assay. The expression of FN1 was increased in OA articular cartilage. Exogenous FN1 increased the expression of LOX at both the mRNA and protein levels in chondrocytes in a dose-dependent manner. A luciferase reporter assay showed that FN1 regulated the expression of LOX through the FN1 promoter. These results suggest that FN1 plays an important role in the induction of LOX in chondrocytes and thereby contributes to OA development.Q: Retrieve the last id inserted via 'INSERT INTO' in SQL Server I have a table: CREATE TABLE IF NOT EXISTS MYTABLE (ID NUMBER(10,0) NOT NULL, [ORDERID] NUMBER(10,0) NOT NULL, DATE DATE NOT

The real question is this: is a very small number of highly trained people with unlimited resources of resources able to suppress the resistance of a nation that has been armed with ballistic missile defense for decades? And the answer is clear: if they can do it in Poland, they can do it anywhere. The ultimate goal of the Polish military operation is to eliminate the possibility of nuclear missile launches from anywhere in the world, and it is also their own goal to demonstrate that despite all efforts to neutralize such threats, they can not be defeated. Unfortunately, such a goal does not seem to be achievable on a political level, and the real reason for the Polish military operation is to keep a number of US missile defense sites at the disposal of the US armed forces for future use in case of any kind of threat. It is worth recalling that the notorious "Launch on Warning" program that was supposed to improve the US missile defense system was almost scrapped after it came out that there was no single, proven means to intercept any ballistic missile. However, the real reason for the elimination of this program has been hidden from the public in a secret bill. It is clear that Russia has a legitimate interest to protect its territory from missile attacks, but it is hard to believe that in the present conditions the limited missile defense system is a very serious threat to the Russian Federation. The whole story of the "Russian threat" is the result of the actions of the US military and intelligence services that were mad on destroying Russia as a rival and to maintain their own positions. The essence of the missile defense system is to create new independent states in

Russia's immediate vicinity. One of the worst examples of this policy is the incorporation of the Republic of Georgia to NATO, which led to a new conflict in Abkhazia, which was strategically important
