Oligopeptides are used to determine the origin of the handedness of biomolecules such as proteins, DNA, RNA, and peptidoglycans. However, the origin of the handedness of biomolecules such as protein chirality has remained unclear. Here, we investigate the molecular origins of protein chirality using the enantiomeric inhibitor pairs L-alanine-L-Ala-L-Ala-L-Ala-N-methyl-D-alanine (L-Ala-D-Ala) and D-alanine-D-Ala-D-Ala-D-Ala-N-methyl-L-alanine (D-Ala-L-Ala). High-resolution (1)H NMR spectroscopy was used to monitor the formation of 1:1 (protein:inhibitor) complexes in different environments. Combining NMR data with CD spectroscopy and molecular dynamics simulations allowed the origin of the handedness to be assigned to the asymmetric amino acids of the oligopeptide molecules. Complexes were formed in the folded state, which results in a strong diastereochemical contribution from the inhibitor to the overall handedness of the protein. The effects of the amino acid chirality are investigated 1cdb36666d
