Q: c++ overloading '=' with '=' I try to overload = operator for my class String. So I have 2 classes. First is String and second is StringBuilder. I want to write something like this: String str = "some text"; StringBuilder strb = StringBuilder() + "more text"; StringBuilder strb = str; I want to write operator = which will assign first parameters to second. It should be like this: strb = str Why do I need this? Assume that I have different classes: Int1, Int2, Int3 and so on. Now I want to have functions: add(Int1); add(Int2); add(Int3); add(Int aa67ecbc25

Paragon Drive Copy Professional [Win/Mac]

Cute and simple interface allows for quick data backup to hard drive, a bit like single-drive backup only better. Conversion of UDF-formatted disks to HFS. Supports remote backups over network. Supports multi-user system. Assigns drive letter to backup and the drive. Supports FAT12, FAT16, FAT32, NTFS, VFAT, HFS. Cons:The application does not have a Help/FAQ (nor any information) included. UDF is not supported out of the box. I have to fix the application before using it. For remote backup, you have to patch the app. Overall:This is an old school copy tool. It performs well and does what it says it will. Its downside is limited support for UDF and the fact that the remote backup is not included out of the box.
