Category:Discographies of French artists Category:Compositions for fluteQ: TimeInterval on a swipe - Xamarin.iOS I am trying to build a very simple app that uses iOS 7 time features. I want to be able to have a timer automatically start and time the user to answer a question. I'd like the timer to start when the app is in the foreground or going to the background. I have read the API but I can't find a way to accomplish this. I have tried using NSTimer, but when starting with no pause and a repeating interval, it starts to count. I also have tried the currentTime and the timeOfDay functions, but they seem to apply to the date and only when running on the background. Is there any way to get this information? Thanks for your time. A: I ended up using the following code.

[Export("updateTimerWithInterval:")] void UpdateTimerWithInterval(CGFloat TimeInterval) { backgroundTaskTimer = new NSTimer(TimeInterval); backgroundTaskTimer.FireDate = NSDate.Now; runningTimer = true; // check for the background if (UIDevice.CurrentDevice.CheckSystemVersion(8, 0)) { NSTimer.RestrictToApplication(backgroundTaskTimer); } else { backgroundTaskTimer.RestrictToRecursive(true); } } And using it by calling UpdateTimerWithInterval(.1f) every.1 of a second. Hope this helps someone with the same issue. Esophageal foreign body in a five-year-old child: a rare entity. Foreign body ingestion in children is usually a benign condition and the common age range is from infancy to 3 years. The diagnosis may be difficult, and delayed diagnosis is common; it is usually diagnosed by a panendoscopy which is the gold standard. The diagnosis is confirmed by endoscopy and radiological imaging. Management of these patients depends on symptoms, location of foreign body and the patients age. We report a case of a 5-year-old boy with a history of foreign body ingestion
