If you're getting started with Photoshop, you will want to learn the following skills before embarking on a trip through Photoshop. Creating and Using Layers Photo editing can get pretty complex. It requires a lot of sorting and organizing of layers. Layers are a format for organizing the visual side of your image. Each layer is a mirror in Photoshop that creates the illusion of depth. It's important to know that a photo's finished image is the result of many layers, some of which may be hidden. To begin, create a new document of your desired dimensions. If you don't know how to, use the "new" option in the Photoshop file menu. Select the "white" color to fill the document, and add an opacity of about 50%. This setting will help with visibility so that you can make more layers. You can create layers by clicking and dragging in the "Layers" palette. You can create a new layer by pressing the "Ctrl+Alt+Shift+N" key combination. You can also add new layers to the document by selecting the layer you want to add to, double-clicking in a new location, and dragging the object onto the new layer. Organize the layers into groups that make sense to you. Grouping layers helps manage and adjust them. In the Layers palette, double-click on the layers you want to move or duplicate. In the Layers palette, you can right-click on a layer and create a group by pressing the right-mouse button and selecting "Group" from the pop-up menu. If you wish to have the layers grouped by color, create a new layer, and then select the color tool from the toolbox, and select "Group" from the pop-up menu. To manipulate the content of the layers, use the move, resize, rotate, color, and opacity tools. You can click and hold on a tool to select several items at once, or select the group of items and click on a selection tool in the toolbox to make a selection. Adding Textures Photoshop's text and image manipulation tools are useful for adding text and images to your images. If you're just beginning, begin by creating a single new layer. Your photo editing project will be the new layer. The first thing you'll want to do is create a selection. A selection is like a border or a mask. You can select
