The robberies have been reported in Basra, Mosul, Karbala and Najaf in southern Iraq, numerous Baghdad residents told The New York Times on Friday. The attacks were reported on Fridays because they are the only workdays Iraqis have off in Iraq. "When they left home, the security situation was relatively good, so the belief is that it is a targeted move," said one security official, speaking on condition of anonymity. Workers who spoke to the Times on condition of anonymity said the guards posted at some important points in Baghdad were not doing their jobs, leaving the infrastructure vulnerable for attacks. The attacks have been particularly bad in the Haifa neighborhood, where about 16,000 people live and work in Baghdad International Airport. The neighborhood is easily accessible from the city and is one of the most crowded in the city. While the neighborhood is not under occupation, it is encircled by military and police bases, and the area can be very dangerous, the Times reported.
