Dietary Tryptophan Enhances Membrane Nanoparticle Formation in Toxoplasma gondii tachyzoites. Toxoplasma gondii is an obligate intracellular parasite that infects a wide variety of animals and can be found in both the acute and chronic phases of infection in humans. T. gondii can easily spread to nearby organs, especially the central nervous system, and is a leading cause of AIDS-related deaths. We demonstrated that dietary tryptophan enhanced the formation of membrane nanoparticles (MNPs) in T. gondii, as compared to arginine. In the presence of tryptophan, the production of MNPs with an average diameter of $1.06 \pm 0.02 \mu\text{m}$ and an average MNPs/cell of 1.5 ± 0.1 increased significantly in a time-dependent manner. In T. gondii, the amino acid metabolism mainly proceeds through the phosphoenolpyruvate-

dependent phosphotransferase (PEP-PTS) pathway. Our study further showed that the activities of the enzymes of PEP-PTS pathway, 6-phosphofructokinase (PFK) and pyruvate kinase (PK), were directly proportional to the tryptophan content in the medium. Inhibition of PFK activity decreased the production of MNPs, while inhibition of PK activity did not. Finally, the presence of a high level of tryptophan

Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has released its latest weather forecast, projecting light winds to help boost the impending Memorial Day for summer travel. It calls for the first eight to 14 days of the summer to be above-average. The current weather models suggest light winds and gradually warming weather, coming on the heels of two strong spring storms. A storm in late May triggered a three-day beach closure in South Carolina's Horry County, with businesses struggling to cope with the weight of the seaside sand. In Norfolk, Va., a boy who went swimming was rescued from the surf. The boy, a 2-year-old, was about 15 feet from shore when a wave pulled him out. He was taken to a hospital, but survived. A weather system in the Western Pacific is bringing strong winds and showers to North America, the National Weather Service reports. The weather service reports that an area of low pressure north of Hawaii is bringing weather disturbances to the
