Having an ArrayList in my program, I'm trying to remove all the HTML tags from it. I have been searching all over the place and could not find the right answer: I need to do this without using regex patterns or containing the exact tags in my list. This is what I have at the moment. final ArrayList myList = new ArrayList(); . . . // What I need to do is: // Remove all the HTML tags from myList final HTML parser = new HTML(); myList = parser.execute(xml); The above is just for example, because I cannot edit the XML format I need to work with at the moment, so the tag class is what I need to consider. How can I do it? A: Use an HTMLDocument. final Document document = builder.parse(""); final org.w3c.dom.Document doc = (org.w3c.dom.Document) document; final List nodes = doc.getElementsByTagName("a"); // will print: nodes = [] A: You could use an XmlSerializer. This'll let you cast the list as a type of XmlObject, which would look something like this: public class XmlObject { private String value; public XmlObject(String value) { this.value = value; } public String getValue() { return this.value; } } The keys should be the names of the tags you want to be stripped of their HTML.

Take charge of your online business 19 July 2017 If you've been investing in a new CMS for your business you may have learned the need to keep your site user-friendly for your customers as well as being a good option for SEO. In fact, if you really want to increase the number of customers you could be driving up the numbers of visits from SEO. Since you're paying for all these efforts and your hard work, why wouldn't you want to take control of it and make sure your CMS is being used the way it was intended to be used? This article will help you do just that. Why do I need a CMS? You don't have to be one of those people who say, "I'm a content manager. I create content." Well, I could have said the same thing in the past and in some circumstances, it was true. Today, a content manager or even a brand manager are things of the past. Content is no longer the only job you do. It's a piece of the puzzle. With that said, your website is not going to work effectively without the right CMS. Yes, you still need people to create content for your site, but that's just one part of what goes into creating a great site. If you've only used a basic site builder and you're wondering why you can't get it to work the way you want, it's because your site is not meeting the needs of your customers. They need a website that is user-friendly, has a sleek look and design, takes them to your company's social media pages, and allows them to find what they are looking for. Why not build your own website from the ground up? A CMS will take the guesswork out of building a great looking site that will work well for your users. A well-designed CMS can
