And it was through the annual BSS reunion he first met and became friends with the-then geologist-turned-paleontologist, Jack Horner. "I was just there every year in a happy little reunion, and then I was working away," Horner says of Davenport's BSS days. "So it was out of the blue when he told me, 'I want to apply for an academic position.' I'd heard about Kevin on campus. He was in and out of faculty groups. He was an all-around good guy who didn't always get the credit he deserved." In those early years, said Davenport, "I really started to get interested in information theory, a field that deals with how to organize information. It's the science of choosing how to encode something so that it's convenient to use but you still have good retrieval and recovery." Davenport went on to work with Benton and Lande, who soon would join the BSS. In 1982, he began a long association with Richard Prum, then an assistant professor at the University of Chicago, and a member of the BSS. "I was at the University of Chicago when Prum came on as an assistant professor, and we started to work together," Davenport says. "We were trying to get people interested in primordial bacterial fossils." During that time he became interested in the study of
